“ When John was little, we took him and his brother to Indiana to visit his grandma. After the visit we left Indiana enroute to Pennsylvania. In the back seat, John found an atlas that had maps of all 50 states, so I thought I'd turn it into a learning moment. As I was driving past fields of corn and beans crossing Indiana, I told him that we would have to go through Ohio to get home. With a puzzled look on his little face, he asked. "What about Oklahoma, dad?" In his logical child's mind, he thought the states were lined up in alphabetical order. No matter how long I live, I'll never forget the boy who tried to make logical sense out of an illogical world.

With all sincerity and indeed earnestly, I give my condolences to the whole family of John Warner Kruse, as well as to those who were close and had, by him, their lives positively impacted. As for his young daughter, I am so sorry that she lost him, her father. I hope and pray that she will get good family support, and with her father now departed, that other good people will help her in learning what she needs to know about life, navigating the real world, and achieving success. It was at my job that I met and only started to know John. When John took over as supervisor on my shift, this was the first step in a badly needed clean-up of a 'toxic work environment'. Everybody's work life became vastly improved. John seemed to always treat people with respect. If I had any trouble managing my work load, he would thoroughly instruct me on different and better methods to make it more than manageable. He told that he was looking for some way to continue improvement to the work culture on our shift. John and I had a wholesome professional relationship on the job. There were, however, a few times when he was a good friend, and on at least a few occasions had been like a brother. I will admit that I have an unusual sense of humor, which sometimes can be dry or acerbic, but John was never without the intelligence to appreciate it. I quite enjoyed sharing with him my own fictional anecdotes (positive humor) about the Detroit approach to work and Henry Ford II. It has been great knowing John, as well as to have been working with him. I made it to church last Sunday (January 15, 2023) and got a 6-day memorial candle for John. May God give us peace and healing, and may His love be with John. P.G.L. January 20, 2023

“ John was a force of nature and lived his life in the most unpredictable ways. Im thankful for the memories we made and the sweet girl who will miss her Dad daily. John will love on through our thoughts and the girl who will blaze a new path of her own. May he Rest In Peace and know that he will be missed.

“ John will always have a special place in my heart. He was kind. He was hilariously funny and witty. He was oh so smart and full of random knowledge. His beautiful eyes and sweet smile lit some of my darkest days and I'm so glad we reconnected. I'll think of you often and I'll love you forever. Rest easy.

“ John was a force of nature. Not a raging tempest but more like a glacier. Leaving behind a better world after he steadfastly faced every challenge the world put in his way. I miss ya chief “ John was born in the town of Concord Massachusetts on January 8th, 1981, the son of David Lorin and Johnn Marie Kruse. He was a blessing given to us by God and one taken away too soon. After four short decades on this earth, John has passed on and it is our prayer that he be with God in heaven, Amen.
