“ Robert was my co-worker for many years. We developed a friendship over that time. Simply put he was just a "truck driver" but also one of the most unique men that I ever encountered. He was highly intelligent, a bit feisty and very loyal. He would tell me long stories of his family members that were so full of detail and so vivid. He'd also talk about hopefully retiring "soon". I do know that whatever others thought about him, it didn't bother him very much one way or the other. He would share his hopes and frustrations with me, which I will cherish forever. I do also know that he was a good father despite his frustrations trying to be so while having to spend so much time away from because of his profession. I expect that I'll probably never meet his likes again. Sail on ...Robert Carl Krumrie
